"I have read all of your work but not marked it," said Mr Chown.
"But why not?" asked Chuks.
"Because," Continued Mr Chown, "I want to try something new."
"But-" started Chuks.
"Just listen!" shouted Mr Chown, "All will become clear, Okay?"

Is this correct?
The general rules of direct speech are:

• Each new character’s speech starts on a new line.

• Speech is opened with speech marks.

• Each line of speech starts with a capital.

• The line of speech ends with a comma, exclamation mark or question mark.

• A reporting clause is used at the end (said Jane, shouted Paul, replied Mum).

• A full stop goes after the reporting clause.

"You'll never guess what I've just seen!" said Sam, excitedly.
"What's that?" asked Louise.
"Our teacher has a broomstick and a black pointy hat in the back of her car. Maybe she's a witch!"
"No, silly! They're for the school play!" replied Louise, sighing.
EXT:

• If the direct speech in the sentence is broken up by information about who is speaking, add in a comma or question mark or exclamation mark to end the first piece of speech and a full stop or another comma before the second piece (before the speech marks), for example:

"It's lovely," she sighed, "but I can't afford it right now."

"I agree!" said Kate. "Let's go!"
So, we are going to spend today editing our work.

Look at the checklist in your books and see if you can complete each task.
Use of commas

In a list:
I saw a table, some chairs and a ring.

To separate clauses:
As the rain began to fall, I ran for cover.

At the start of a sentence:
Later on, I went to the park.

After a name in speech:
“Grandma, can I have some cake?”
I saw a man standing in front of me with a long beard. I ran to him and asked him what his name was. He didn’t look at me and he went away. I was sad.
Tell: I went through the door.

Show: Light shimmered underneath the entrance to the room. The handle was a faded and blotchy gold colour. It wasn't quite rusty yet but it was well on its way. I stretched out my hand and gave a slight push. Then I stepped through. The light was blinding dude.
